Tech Talk

With cold weather approaching, now is a great time to talk about fuel conditioning. A Minnesota spec taken from the Minnesota B20 Handling Guide states that “No. 2 diesel has a cloud point in the range of -5°F and 5°F. No. 1 diesel has a cloud point of -40°F or less.” Cloud point is the temperature at which wax crystals in the fuel become visible and show a cloudy appearance in the tank, also known as “gelling”.

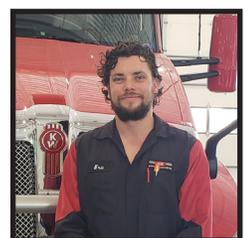

Many local fuel stations will treat their diesel fuel to a certain point. Check with your local fuel stations for their spec, as it can vary. When temperatures start dropping below 30°F it's a good idea to add Power Service Diesel Fuel Supplement + Cetane Boost to your tank to help prevent against gelling. Note that PowerService Diesel 911 will help with an already gelled fuel system, but it will not act as a preventative.

Most importantly, when it is cold outside, make sure to: check the bottoms of fuel tanks regularly for water, keep all fuel tanks topped off to prevent air and moisture from being present in the tank, and stay on top of your fuel filter maintenance.

Stay warm this winter, and keep on trucking!
